The Kingdom of North
The word north is related to the Old High German nord, both descending from the Proto-Indo-European unit *ner-, meaning "left; below" as north is to left when facing the rising sun."North American," as a noun, was first used by Ben Franklin in 1766.

The Kingdom of South
From the Old English suð ("southward, in the south"). Suð came from the Proto-Germanic sunthaz, which may have been based on sunnon ("sun") in reference to sunnier, warmer southern regions. South China Sea is the dominant term used in English for the sea, and the name in most European languages is equivalent. This name is a result of early European interest in the sea as a route from Europe and South Asia to the trading opportunities of China

Persia and Germany
In the nineteenth- and early-twentieth-century, there emerged a special relationship between Persia and Germany. Persian interest in Germany began with the signing of the treaties of Golestan and Torkmanchai, which demoted Iran from a great-power to a regional actor. Faced with the looming prospect of direct colonization, Persias increasingly saw Germany as a third force that could challenge British and Russian ambitions in Persia. Though the Qajar court benefited from dispensing concessions to British, Russian,and French companies, the Persian intelligentsia criticized these royal excesses and championed rapprochement with Germany, both as an anti-monarchical and anticolonial stance. https://www.globalsecurity.org/military/world/iran/history-de.htm

Wilhelm II.
15 Jun5 1888 – 9 November 1918

German: Friedrich Wilhelm Viktor Albert von Preußen (Prussia); was the last German Emperor (Kaiser) and King of Prussia, ruling the German Empire and the Kingdom of Prussia; He was the eldest grandchild of the British Queen Victoria and related to many monarchs and princes of Europe. Crowned in 1888, he dismissed the Chancellor, Otto von Bismarck, in 1890 and launched Germany on a bellicose "New Course" in foreign affairs that culminated in his support for Austria-Hungary the crisis of July 1914 that led in a matter of days to the First World War. He was forced to proclaim the October Constitution in 1918, making him a constitutional monarch.

From 1945 to 1955, Operation Paperclip granted nearly 1,000 German scientists American citizenship. Many had been longtime members of the Nazi party and the Gestapo and had conducted experiments on humans at concentration camps and commited other war crimes. The scientists ended up in the U.S. military industrial complex, worked with the CIA, NASA & more. One of the Nazi experiments that continued in America was mind control... known as the CIA's Project MK-ULTRA.

The Operation Overcast was a US military project to recruit German scientists and technicians at the end of the Second World War in 1945 after the defeat of Nazi Germany and to secure their - military skills and knowledge.

Under the Codename Operation Paperclip, the transfer of German war and civilian prisoners to the USA took place, most of them were scientists or industrialists.

Mao Zedong
In Power: June 19, 1945 – September 9, 1976

... also known as Chairman Mao, was a Chinese communist revolutionary, political theorist and founding father of the People's Republic of China, which he governed as the Chairman of the Communist-Prt. of China from its establishment until his death in 1976. Born the son of a wealthy farmer in Shaoshan, Hunan, Mao adopted a Chinese nationalist and anti-imperialist outlook in early life, particularly influenced by the events of the Xinhai Revolution of 1911 and May Fourth Movement 1919. Mao turned China from a feudal backwater into one of the most powerful countries in the World.

Jiang Zemin
In Power: 24 June 1989 – 15 November 2002

Unexpectedly he came to power as a "compromise candidate" after the 1989 Tiananmen Square protests. Jiang has been known since 1989 as the "core of third generation "the leader of the Communist Party. Under Jiang Zhang's leadership, China saw significant economic growth with the continuation of reforms, saw the peaceful return of Hong Kong from the United Kingdom and Macau from Portugal, and improved its relations with the outside world hile the Communist Party exercised its strong control over the government.

In 1986, Hong Kong became a separate contracting party to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Accordingly, Hong Kong was one of the founding members of the World Trade Organization (WTO) when it was established on 1 January 1995. Hong Kong also became a member of the Customs Cooperation Council (subsequently renamed the World Customs Organization) in 1987 and the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation in 1991.

After 1st of July 1997, Hong Kong's status in these and other international organisations remains unchanged except that our participation is now under the name of "Hong Kong, China".

China was admitted as a WTO member on 1 January 1995; 2 Years before Hong Kong was handed over to China in 1997.

In the early 1980s, negotiations between the United Kingdom and China resulted in the 1984 Sino-British Joint Declaration, which paved way for the transfer of sovereignty of Hong Kong in 1997, when it became a special administrative region (SAR) of the Peoples Republic of China with a high degree of autonomy.

The Chinese government assumed formal sovereignty over Macau on 20 December 1999 as a special administrative region (SAR) after over 400 years of Portuguese colonial rule. This event also marked the end of the Portuguese Empire and European colonialism in Asia

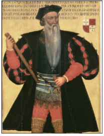
Jorge Álvares



The earliest European visitor on record was Jorge Álvares, a Portuguese explorer, who arrived in 1513. Having established a trading post in a site they called "Tamão" in Hongkong waters, Portuguese merchants commenced with regular trading in southern China.

In 1898, Britain obtained a 99-year lease from Qing under the Convention for the Extension of Hong Kong Territory, in which Hong Kong obtained a 99-year lease of Lantau Island, the area north of Boundary Street in Kowloon up to Shenzhen River and over 200 other outlying islands. Hong Kong soon became a major entrepôt thanks to its free port status, attracting new immigrants to settle from both China and Europe. The society, however, remained racially segregated and polarised under early British colonial policies.

Taiwan also joined the WTO under the name of the Separate Custom Territories of Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen, and Matsu, just after the admittance of China.

The Republic of China was proclaimed after the Xinhai revolution in mainland China on January 1, 1912 in Nanking. The island of Taiwan, under the rule of the Japanese Empire from 1895 to 1945, fell to the Republic of China only after the Second World War. In 1949, after the founding of the People's Republic of China, the government, elites and armed forces of the Republic of China withdrew to the island of Taiwan. There, established by Chiang Kai-Shek state party Kuomintang established while maintaining the state of emergency, a decades-old one-party rule.

The second half of the 20th century was characterized by high economic growth, In the 1970s, protectionism was on the rise, and the United Nations switched recognition from the Republic of China to the People's Republic of China as the sole legitimate representative of all China. It was expelled by General Assembly Resolution 2758 and replaced in all UN organs with the PRC. The KMT began a process of enhancement and modernization of the industry, mainly in high technology (such as microelectronics, personal computers and peripherals).

Many Taiwanese brands became important suppliers of worldwide known firms such as DEC or IBM, while other established branches in Silicon Valley and other places inside the United States and became known. The government also recommended the textile and clothing industries to enhance the quality and value of their products to avoid restrictive import quotas, usually measured in volume. The decade also saw the beginnings of a genuinely independent union movement after decades of repression Trade between China (PRC) and Africa increased by 700% during the 1990s, and China is currently Africa's largest trading partner. The Forum on China-Africa Cooperation FOCAC) was established in October 2000 as an official forum to greatly strengthen the relationship.I n 2006, Beijing issued its first White Paper on Africa, calling for 'comprehensive and longterm cooperation'. Following an old Chinese saying, 'to end poverty, build a road', Chinese companies have become increasingly involved in building infrastructure, power plants and bandwidth, as well as exploring minerals and establishing markets for Chinese products.

China's involvement in Africa is based on two pillars: strategic diplomacy and business. In its early years, the People's Republic reached out to non-aligned countries in Africa and established warm (though not very consequential) relationships with socialist regimes in countries such as Tanzania.

The most recent switch of emphasis in Chinese foreign policy has been a subtle changein China's strategic diplomacy. With the rise of Xi Jinping, China has dropped the "keeping a low profile" description of Chinese foreign policy and replaced it with "striving for achievement". Western literature often calls this China's "new assertive approach".

So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.
Daniel 11:9

China: GATT and WTO

The WTO was developed from GATT. The Chinese Government was involved in the founding of GATT and officially became a Contracting Party to GATT on 21 May 1948.

China gained observer status with GATT and from 1986, began working towards joining that organization.

China aimed to be included as a WTO founding member (which would validate it as a world economic power) but this attempt was thwarted because United States, European countries, and Japan requested that China first reform various tariff policies, including tariff reductions, open markets and industrial policies.

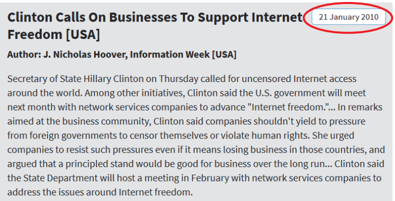
Hillary Clinton today called on Beijing to hold a thorough and open investigation into the hacking of human rights activists' email accounts.



Clinton Calls On Businesses To Support Internet Freedom [USA] 21 January 2010

Author: J. Nicholas Hoover, Information Week [USA]

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Thursday called for uncensored Internet access around the world. Among other initiatives, Clinton said the U.S. government will meet next month with network services companies to advance "Internet freedom."... In remarks aimed at the business community, Clinton said companies shouldn't yield to pressure from foreign governments to censor themselves or violate human rights. She urged companies to resist such pressures even if it means losing business in those countries, and argued that a principled stand would be good for business over the long run... Clinton said the State Department will host a meeting in February with network services companies to address the issues around Internet freedom.

Foreign Direct Investment Policy (FDI) policies in China have evolved alongside economic development and strengthened institutional capacity. A gradual and prudent approach has been taken in the process of liberalization. When market institutions were not fully in place in 1980s and 1990s, China experimented with opening up to foreign investment in selected coastal cities and in special economic zones/industrial parks with a focus on attracting exportoriented manufacturing FDI.

Corresponding to China's shift of its development goal from an emphasis on GDP growth towards a more harmonious balanced development, China made a radical commitment to services liberalization in its accession to WTO.

This has triggered a shift of FDI to service industries. By 2009, FDI in services increased 3 times from that in 2000, while manufacturing FDI in China increased 81 percent. Regional production networks in East Asia grew substantially in the past few years and were largely aligned with China as their center.

The results have been extraordinary. Thousands of multinational corporations have invested in China. The latest UNCTAD report on World Investment Perceptions lists China in first place among the top 15 investment locations. Hong Kong SAR and Taiwan, China have traditionally been the most important sources of FDI, but the presence of investors from Japan, the USA, and Europe has grown over the years.

The TPP began as an expansion of the Trans-Pacific Strategic Economic Partnership Agreement signed by Brunei, Chile, New-Zealand, and Singapore in 2005.

Beginning in 2008, additional countries joined the discussion for a broader agreement: Australia, Canada, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, Peru, the United-States, and Vietnam, bringing the total number of countries participating in the negotiations to twelve Current trade agreements between participating countries, such as the North American Free Trade Agreement, will be reduced to those provisions that do not conflict with the TPP or provide greater trade liberalization than the TPP.

The Obama administration considered the TPP a companion agreement to the proposed Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP), a broadly similar agreement between the U.S. and the European Union.

The Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), or the Trans Pacific Partnership Agreement (TPPA), is a trade agreement between Australia, Brunei, Canada, Chile, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Singapore, Vietnam and the United States; which D. Trump terminated the 23th of January 2017.

The July 2009 Ürümqi riots were a series of violent riots over several days that broke out on 5 July 2009 in Ürümqi, the capital city of the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (XUAR), in northwestern People's Republic of China (PRC).

The first day's rioting, which involved at least 1,000 Uyghurs, began as a protest but escalated into violent attacks that mainly targeted Han Chinese people.

China's People's Armed Police were deployed, and two days later hundreds of Han people clashed with both police and Uyghurs. PRC officials said that a total of 197 people died, among those killed most of them are Hans, with 1,721 others injured and many vehicles and buildings destroyed.

Many men disappeared during wide-scale police sweeps in the days following the riots; Human Rights Watch (HRW) documented 43 cases and said figures for real disappearances were likely to be much higher.

The Internet in China arrived in 1994, as the inevitable consequence of and supporting tool for the "socialist market economy". Gradually, while Internet availability has been increasing, the Internet has become a common communication platform and tool for trading information.

In 1998, the Communist Party of China feared that the China Democracy Party (CDP) would breed a powerful new network that the party elites might not be able to control. The CDP was immediately banned, followed by arrests and imprisonment. That same year, the GFW project was started. The first part of the project lasted eight years and was completed in 2006. The second part began in 2006 and ended in 2008.

On 6 December 2002, 300 people in charge of the GFW project from 31 provinces and cities throughout China participated in a four-day inaugural "Comprehensive Exhibition on Chinese Information System". At the exhibition, many western high-tech products, including Internet security, video monitoring and human face recognition were purchased. It is estimated that around 30,000-50,000 police were employed in this gigantic project.

Obama's East Asia Strategy represented a significant shift in the foreign policy of the United States. It took the country's focus from the Middle Eastern/European sphere and began to invest heavily in East Asian countries, some of which are in close proximity to the People's Republic of China. Previously, the administrations of Bill Clinton and George W. Bush, naval and air weapons systems were deployed to Guam and Japan, and cooperation began with Singapore by constructing an aircraft carrier facility at Changi Naval Base.

Additional focus was placed on the region with the Obama administration's 2012 "Pivot to East Asia" regional strategy, whose key areas of actions are: "strengthening bilateral security alliances; deepening our working relationships with emerging powers, including with China; engaging with regional multilateral institutions; expanding trade and investment; forging a broad-based military presence; and advancing democracy and human rights."A report by the Brookings Institution states that reactions to the pivot strategy were mixed, as "different Asian states responded to American rebalancing in different ways."

There has been strong perception from China that all of these are part of US' China containment policy. Proponents of this theory claim that the United States needs a weak, divided China to continue its hegemony in Asia. This is accomplished, the theory claims, by the United States establishing military, economic, and diplomatic ties with countries adjacent to China's borders.

Steinberg said that the United States “cannot underestimate the damaging impact the disputes over cyber are having on the overall relationship” with China.

“I think the most important thing that can be done in the short term is precisely to address the issues that you’re concerned about: to at least address the issue of piracy and industrial espionage,” Steinberg said.
